Ismail's Avarice and Tewfik's Economy.

[Paris Correspondence of the London Times.] Ismail's sole passion was for hoarding, and curious anecdotes are current on this subject. Out of forty-two table-services dating back to Said Pasha, and some of them of massive gold set with precious stones, he has taken away forty-one; and when the personage I have mentioned, on being invited to breakfast by Tewfik, remarked that his table service was incomplete, Tewtik replied, "Yes, it is the only one my father has left me." From the moment abdication was pressed on him Ismaii's only idea was to stave it off long enough to pack up everything, and when all his trunks were on board the sensation was such that the consuls asked themselves whether they ought not to lay an embargo on them. His fortune is estimated at £16,-000,000. Yet the very day of his departure he gave a crowning example of his ruling passion. A red carpet had been laid down on the quay as a mark of royal honor. Ismail, affecting to show that he was no longer a sovereign, walked alongside it on the bare ground, but on arriving at the spot where customs duties are collected, and learning that there was £4,000 (Turkish) in the office, he resumed for a moment his regal functions, and ordered the money to be brought to him on board, which, however, did not prevent his writing a few days afterward to Tewfik for £3,000 Turkish), "which he stood in great want of, not baving a farthing." Unlike his father, Tewtik pushes ideas of economy almost to an extreme. His household is reduced to the simplest scale, and every month the salaries of his personal attendants are paid under his own supervision. He has reduced his civil list to a low figure; nothing goes into his private purse; he has made it a kind of ambition to meet the engagements of Egypt, and an eye-witness assures me he has seen him extinguishing candles which were burning in an empty

A Little Anecdote. I was reminded to-day of an anecdote of Samuel Carter Hall, spiritualist, tectotaller, and editor of the Art Journal, which I am tempted to relate, inasmuch as, to the best of my belief, the story has not yet appeared in print. Mr. Hall is the greatest adept at humbugging young artists out of examples of their work that ever lived. His house in Holland street is a treasure-house of artgems—gifts from the artists in consideration of gushing notices in the Art

"Well, I sold it the other day for twelve hundred and fifty." "You did, eh?" "Yes." "Ah-for fifty pounds. You remember, of course, that I never had the fifty?" "Ah! THE SPELLING REFORM .- The Home Journal, of New York, and the Utica (N. Y.) Herald bave joined the Chicago Tribune in introducing the improved methods of spelling recommended by the American Philological Association.

The Tribune now fights its old political enemy under the diminished guise of a "demagog," throws the ægis of its protection over the "pedagog," abbreviates the "decalog" to meet the requirements of a fost age, promises to extend the "catalog" of its excisions in the future, and thus takes at a step one of the highest seats in the fonetic "synagog." It compresses its proceedings into a " program."

A bold, bad burglar recently broke into the house of an editor in the watches of the night. The editor awakened and questioned the intruder: "What do you want here? What look you for?" Said the burglar, grufily, "Money." "Hold on a minute," quoth the editor, "and I will help you; I've been looking myself for ten years, but perhaps the two of us may have better luck." Then was the burglar much disgusted, but the editor called it a joke, and insisted that the burglar ought to set em up .- Stillwater Lumberman.

The steamships now leaving New York for Europe are more than usually crowded with Americans. Some persons may attribute the exodus to the pedestrian epidemic in New York, but the true cause of the hegira is owing to the discouraging fact that the season for jokes on "putting up stoves" is at hand. It is worse than the yellowfever. The epidemic will extend all over the country, and a large increase in the number of suicides may be apprehended. Norristown Herald.
